French cashmere is a fabric that holds its position in fashionable favor year after year and season after season with unvary ing monotony. French grades are shown this season, which are more than ever tempting and desirable—first, from their most beautiful and varied coloring and ex-quisite fluish, and second, from their excempung and desirable—first, from their most beautiful and varied coloring and exquisite finish, and second, from their exceedingly low price by the yard. Very many women prefer French cashmeres to all other dress goods for ordinary wear. The new invoices have some charming features this season; among others the dainty qualities of figured patterns on pale-hued grounds, with fine foulard designs in delicate colors. These fancy cashmeres are specially adapted for watering-place wear for young ladies, and with soft, creamy lace trimmings, with ribbon bows and loops of dark, rich velvet to tone the whole, they prove eminently becoming in youthful forms and faces. The plain cashweres in monocrome make very dressy and ladylike toilets for more elderly women, in the deeper and neutral colors, made up in combination with velvet, plain or striped.

Let it be this eccentric flights and his untoward steadily borne in mind that the Democrats seldom fail to get to the polls on election which seems almost God-like he stood day and that any lack of interest on the among the glants of the age, and the part of the Republicans might result in sweep and strength of his marvellous losing control of the affairs of the city; A faculties appeared to be bounded by no little carnest effort is all that is necessary limit. on the part of the Republicans and this we believe will be cheer ulty given.

The Voice of Piscataquis.

With this expression, whatever individuals may claim, the position of Bangor cannot be misunderstood. She gives no uncertain sound. We can only say that she has interests and rights that the State Legislature should respect and defend, especially when those interests and rights are sought to be invaded and trampled under foot by foreign influence. The interests of this locality and the interests of the settled portions of Piccataquis county would be largely promoted by the construction of the International Hailway, but to promote those International Hailway, but to promote those Interests it is essential that the road bed of the B. & P. R. R. should be utilized by that company as far as possible. Our county has suck large sums of money in the construction of their railway. Towns are struggling under the oppressive weight of indebtedness incurred in securing such railway facilities as they have.—Piscataquis Cherver. The Voice of Piscataquis. not a cold address to reason, but it pene-trated the recesses of the soul and struck! fle on the altar of the emotions. The in-tense earnestness of his deliverances stirred

The interests of Piscataquis and Bangor are identical in this toatter, and the above paragraph disposes of the idle statement that Piscataquis is opposed to Bangor in the contest now before the Legislature. Like Bangor the towns of that county have put out their money for the construction Inssion. He never dealt in subtle and abof a railroad and now they are naturally averse to having their property rulned by to the mind and beart of his hearers in a parallel line when there is no reason why this foreign corporat on ahould not comply with the agreement heretofore entered into. The more this matter is examined in all its bearings the better it is for Bangor. The leading papers of the State generally recognize the fairness of Bangor's claim and sustain ther position in this struggle for justice. We have already quot. and on the platform, he thundered against ed from the Portland Press a pointed endorsement of our case and now the Lewiston Journal says:

Bangor seems to make a pretty liberal offer to the Canadian Pacific. It says to that corporation: You say you cannot use our B. and P. road on account of its grades and curves. We agree to make those grades and curves conform with the rest of your line. If you will consent to use it on this condition, we will withdraw our opposition is we cannot fix our grades and curves.

This is a received.

This is practically the case in a nutshell and we have yet to hear any, substantial reason assigned why said provision should not be attached to the amendment asked for by the International Road. Fair treatment is all we alk in this matter and certainly a Maine Legislature ought not to refuse to accord it.

Ward Seven.

Our Democratic brethren in Ward reliant and Seven, it appears, do not intend to gratify the ambition of M . M. J. Madden again and he is forced to content himself with a William Conners wilks off with the first prize. The Republicans made a splendid very fullness of their brilliancy, but his prize. The Republicans made a spiendid fight in this ward last spring and as a result, the result of that portion of the six ilt the people of that portion of the city have been ably represented in the Board of lustre. Submit your agaments to the public gentlemen, in order that the verdict may be rendered on this important question.

The Reason Why.

Our Democratic contemporary does not appear to be particularly enthusiastic over the coming elect on. It disposes of the Democratic causes in an editorial of just twelve lines, closing with the query "whynot make it Mayo" Minivancy this year?" Well, for one reason, because the voters of Bangor prefer to make it Mayor Brags.

M. Malvancy is sailly handicapped by being the candidate of a party in which the voters of this city do not take much stock. They believe it is for their beat in trees to citrust their municipal affairs in the bands of the Republican major the Presidential Succession bill, which governd the possibility of Sherman; or over the Presidential Count bill which provide for a bounting energy of Bayard for the possibility of Sherman; or over the Presidential Count bill which provide for a bounting energy of labeled to happen again [as lighting to strike the happen agai Bragg together with a Republican majority in the City Council. took up their stations in front of the house A large number of floral emblems were received before the private services commenced. The floral tributes came pouring in from all quarters. The coffin rested in the centre of the front parlor and it was surrounced with a bank of flowers. The remains were dressed in a suit of black broadcloth, with the coat buttoned and the right hand laid across the leart. The features were natural and there was a smile on the face. The long gray hair was brushed back the same as Mr. Beecher wore it when alive

After residing the services

After residing the service, Rev Dr Hall, who officiented, spoke for some fifteen minutes, alluding in the most affecting manner to the strong friendship which had existed for many years between himself and Mr. Beecher; The members of the family then retired to the other rooms and the undertakers came up and carried the casket down the steps and to the hearse, which stood mither rear of the Thirteen'h Region ment. On the coilin was laid a pall of bright green ferns, and with its emeral to be interminable the pautiful shades of many varieties of roses.

Half an hour after she is at the keeper's lodge, knocking timidly, then louder, but ever in vain at the door. Then she goes to the window and looks in, and can just make out that the interior is bare, no curtains, no blinds, no sign of the house being inhabited. She falls on the doorstep and weeps, and vainly knocks agan, but the knock sounds hollow. There is, there can be do response. Mr. and Mrs. Redfern are no longer there. After the burglary at the hall, the keeper fell under suspicion for laving introduced Mr. Beaufort, whom the detectives pronounced to be the head of a well known gang which the police have been unable to break up or at prebend.

Mr. Tottenham was a peremptory man, and, when he saw that the keeper's family had facilitated the execution of the robbery, Redfern was dismissed immediately, at a week's notice, without a character. The same fate attended the butter, Mr. Thomson, and the house-keeper, Mrs. Podgings.

Two hours later the same feeble, footsore figure retraced her steps, and came against the jate leading to the mill. Trip it was, but, altered, broken in spirit and in body; Trip, now utterly alone in the world.

She was in her drushed strawberry gown, with a dark clonk over it, the crisp, clean, bright dress of a few weeks ago iwas now crumpied, solled, draggled, like the spirit of her who wore it. From the moment she had uttered that ery, "The Ringwood plate!" conscions-ness had deserted her. She could recall a flerce face, white, with glistening types, and a pair of false whiskers hall fallen off, before her, and a hand raised, grasp-ing a silver candlestick, a vivid, horrible, haunting sight, and she remembered nothing more till she woke in her bedroom with an aching head, that was ban-daged, and with a smell of vinegar in her nose.

She was on her bed; she turned her head and saw blood on the pillow, and turned again and saw the face of Nelly.

turned again and saw the face of Nelly.

"You're come round at last, ary you?"
said the woman. "Well, you'll have to get round quick. I ain't going to nurse you forever. You never ought to have been brought here."

By dagrees poor Trip learned that she had been knocked down and stunned; that a quarrel had been the result between her husband and his "pa.s" who had struck her, and that the three men had made off with the plate out of the country, or, at all events, into sofe quarters. The house had been cleared of what little furniture there was, only Nelly remained to watch Trij. Mr. Nelly remained to watch Trij. Mr. Beaufort, as he called himself, and who Benifort, as he called himself, and who really loved the poor girl, had ordered Nelly, one of the gang, to be with Trip till she recovered, not only for Trip's sake, but for the safety of the party. She was to be kept under guard, not allowed to leave the house for some days, till the gang had escaped, and danger of pursuit from information furnished by Trip was over.

from information furnished by Trip was over.

Accordingly Nelly had nursed and attended to Trip till she was sufficiently recovered to leave, and then had turned her out of the house, which she also deserted. The house had been taken under a false name with false references, and had been made the headquarters of the gang, where they had defaced and melted the silver and jewelry which they obtained. After the great burglary at Ringwood, it was advisable to shaft quarters.

was the fall.

Trip stood at the gate of the mill,
She could go no further. She had no money. She had no shoes. She had no friends, no home, no food—no name even; only a little feeble pride in her still held her together. She had passed tho Rose; she had! felt half theilned to go in there and cast herself on the pity of the landlady, but her pride withheld her. No; there was one, and one only who could help her efficiently, to wnom she could appeal, who would not upbraid her, who would screen her and deal prudently with her.

She must go to her friend—to Joc. She might do that without loss to her self respect. She was a married woman, and could be nothing henceforth to Joe. A weak, broken friend appealing for help to return to her father and mother, that was till she was and all site wanted. He could tell her where her parents were, and he would restore her to them.

So she entered through the xate and Trip stood at the gate of the mill.

and he would restore her to them.

So she entered through the gate and wearily crept to the foot of the stair. She recalled Joe's words. Was she, as he had said, coming there to revisit the mill in her splendid equipage, with brass mounted harness and liveried servant, in pink silk and feathers and lace.

She came in the old, stained crushed strawberry gown, with a bandaged head, and in tear-stained face, and a broken spirit, her feet waysore, and her pride in the mire.

The great black mill stood up against the far-away red glare of London, but not altogether dark, for above were light. Joe had a phradime lamp in the flour chamber, and it was so placed as to shine through the decread stores.

through the door, and down the ladder stair.

She beld to the rall, and tried to climb the stair. She would reach the well known chamber, and throw berself in a corner heside the flour box, or between the sacks, and whit till Joe came. But Trip's strength was not equal to the effort. She pulled herself up one step, then another. The steps were will apart, and she had not the strength to draw herself up many. She got, perhaps, half wny up, and then fell on the stairs, fell sitting on, one step with her bapidaged hand on mosther, and her bleeding feet on a still lower step. Then all her power left her. She tried to lift herself to her feet, but could not. She could not reach and grasp the rail; she sank again.

As her head rested on the step, the smell of the flour came into her nose, from the white dust on it, and it brought a dim, faint sense of pleasure to her. She had her face were the total one was and the head her face were the total one. She had her face were to the same again.

smen of the nour came into her nose, from the white dust on it, and it brought a dim, faint sense of pleasure to her. She had her face curned to the sky, and saw the clouds drive by: now a star appeared, then went out, then sparkled again. Even so her senses seemed to come and go, her concomments to drift, away and then become intensely clear. She could not call, but she pulled her whatle from her become, where it immg since on that terrible night ahe suppended it there, and put it to her lips, and tried to blow a summons on it. She had forgotten that it was split and vecletes; she had the end between her lips blowing and the string looped round, her hand, and even the effort to blow westoo severe for her, for, initial of blowing a call, she blow her assisting consciousies monacotarily.

ONCE MORE.

A fortnight had passed since Trip had made the discovery that her husband was one of a gang of burgiare, and that this gang had taken the Ringwood plate.

It was night. The wind was high, blowing from the northwest over the clayland level, and roaring in the trees of the park. The only light visible is in the mill. Although night, the sails are dying, the miller is at work, the stones are grinding, the shifter is shaking cut the fine flour from the thick. The light from the nill traces a broken thread of fire in the dilke, broken because of the duckweed which covers the water.

There are stars in the sky, no moon; but the stars suffer celipse from the great clouds that are rolled over the heavens by the wind, then shine forth again bright and frosty. Away in the direction of London is a dull, red, suroral glow, the reflection of the great city in the laze that overarches it.

Along the London road from the city creeps a female figure, feebly, limpingly. As she comes to the gate leading to the mill she looks up at the light and stands trembling and sobbing—then she creeps on again, foot-sore limb-weary, toward the park.

Half an hour after she is at the keeper's lodge, knocking simidly, then louder, but ever in volume the sale conset of the door. CHAPTER XV.

LITTLE TUPENNY.

When Trip returned to her senses, after a long lapse into darkness, she was in the miller's cottage, in the arm chair by the fire, without her closk, in the battered pink dress, that seemed fresh dyed in the rosy glow or the hearth-fire that fell over it.

Mrs. Western was standing by her; Joe was kneeling, raking the coals together, and looking into her face.

She could not speak, but the widow gave her warm cordials made from Joe's honey, sweet with the fragrance of the beans.

gave her warm cordials made from Joe's honey, sweet with the fragrance of the beans.

Joe knew even more than did Trip. He knew the real name of the fellow who had come to stay about Ringwood. His name was Paice, but he went by many an allas—Jameson, Davenant, Spencer, Jeffries. He was well known to the police, who, however, had been hitherto mable to take him. Joe know, also, what Trip did not, that he was already married, and had a wife and children living in Manchester. Consequently, the marriage in Ringwood church with Trip was invalid.

If on the moment that the burglary had been discovered Joe rushed to the true conclusion.

"My mind all along mistrusted that man. I knew Beaufort was a swell mobeman sent down to learn the ways about the house. Poor Trip! Trip will return."

Then every night he worked in the mili, and had his light in the flour chamber.

Redfern was dismissed. Redfern was dismissed.

"She'll have no home to come to; she'll return and find her house empty. She'll come to the old mill, I know she will, and I'll be ready to receive her."

He was right; she had come as a final refuge to the dear old windmill, and the strong arms had caught her to hold her fast, and not let her go again.

"Trip!" said Joe, "I'm off now. You shall remain with mother. The man will mind the mill. I'll follow that secondrel Beanfort, or Paice, or whatever he calls Besufort, or Paice, or whatever he calls himself, if it be round the world. He "Then Trip put ont her hand and grasped Joe's arm."

"Joe, dear friend," she said, and her "Joe, dear friend," she said, and her voice went straight to his heart, as did the look out of her sunken eyes, "Joe, leave him alone. He wronged me, not you. I forgive him for this— that he has brought me down out of my folly and price! Joe! It was my own self which was my worst enemy—not he; no, not he. If I had not been vain and giddy I should never have—have cast away a jewel to get a sham." She suddenly dragged off the diamond ring (value, necording to Mr. Beaufort, £150) and threw it into the fire. "I—I only am to himme."

"I—I only am to hame."

Then Joe took the hand, and, holding it in both of his, said, in earnest tones, still kneeling on one knee, with the rosy glow of the fire shining over him and her:

"Oh, little Tu'penny—"

"A bad penny—nn ulterly bad penny that has come back," said she, sadly. that has come back," said she, sadly,
"Not so!" he spoke with a shout, and sprung to his feet. "No, not so: A battered Tu'penny, sore defaced, that has come back to the proper mint to be melted, and milled, and moided again.
Come, throw away the old broken, split whistle. I alwiys said I would come to you when you needed me without whistling, and how—now I will ever be beside you, and you will never need to whistle or call. I si to to so?"
"Be more quiet, Joe," said his nother.
"She has fainted again with overmuch joy."

"Mother?" he would not be quiet. He put his arms under Trip and hitted her out of the chair, held her aloft, then close to his heart. "Mother! The little Tu'penny of brass is come back to be minted in gold! I cannot help myself; I must shout, and sing, and talk, and laugh."

THE END.

COMING HOME TO DIE.

At a period of life when budding womanhood requires all her strength to meet the demands nature makes upon it, many a young woman returns home from the severe mental strain of school with a broken-down constitution, and her functions disarranged, to go to an early grave. If she had been wisely consulted and given the beneit of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" her bodily development might have kept pace with her mental growth, and health and beauty would not have given way to decline and de th.

Agree that catarrh is no more nor less than an inflammation of the lining membrane of the mani air passages.

Nasal catarrh and all catarrhal affection of the head are not diseases of the blood, and it is a serious mistake to treat them as such. No conscientious physician ever attempts to do so.

It is held by eminent medical men that sooner or later a specific will be found for every disease from which huminity suffers. The facts justify us in assuming that for catarrh at lenst a poedive cure already exists in Ely's Cream Belm.
